The Australian Electricity Market Initiative (AEMI) is a recent initiative introduced by the Monash Business School to spur academic research, policy formulation and industry engagement in the electricity sector in Australia. Its goal is "to become the pre-eminent centre for all matters related to electricity markets." Areas of research that AEMI focuses on include, but are not limited to: storage integration in the national grid, wholesale market design and dispatch, the emergence of new services, the industrial organisation of electricity markets and competition policy, and network pricing and regulation. Formally AEMI is part of the Centre for Global Business (CGB), a multidisciplinary research centre at Monash Business School. The CGB aims at becoming a leading research hub on the challenges, practices and potential for businesses in the global. For more information about the Centre, please visit www.monash.edu/business/centre-for-global-business.
